My government hates me

By Robert R. Taylor

It is a common sight in the streets of Washington, D.C., to see a young man in a dark jacket and light-colored shirt, walking with a determined stride. He is a member of the Young Americans for Freedom (YAF), a conservative organization that has been active in the city since its founding in 1960. The YAF is a part of a larger movement that seeks to promote free-market economics and limited government. The young man in the street is not alone. There are many others like him, and they are all part of a growing movement that is changing the face of the city. The YAF is not just a group of young men. It is a group of young men and women who are passionate about their beliefs and who are willing to stand up for them. They are a part of a larger movement that is changing the face of the city. The YAF is not just a group of young men. It is a group of young men and women who are passionate about their beliefs and who are willing to stand up for them. lonesome cowboys
FILM

by Tim Roper

There's a lot of talk about the "loneliness" of the cowboy. But in the new film "Lonely Cowboys," the loneliness is not just a feeling, it's a way of life. The film follows a group of cowboys as they travel across the country, looking for work and a place to call home. The story is told in a series of vignettes, each focusing on a different character. The film is a beautiful and moving portrait of a way of life that is disappearing.
